Casa Chablé
Quintana Roo, Mexico

At dinner parties in London and New York, talk often turns to how to go 'beyond Tulum' on Mexico's Caribbean coast. Well, the answer is Casa Chablé in the Sian Ka'an Biosphere Reserve, a UNESCO World Heritage Site and one of the world's most untouched wildlife havens. Set on a private stretch of coast, it has just 10 rooms and a vibe of barefoot luxury, ultimate seclusion and true immersion in nature. Feeling adventurous, we kayaked and discovered sea caves and inland cenotes, hiked to Muyil ruins and enjoyed the crystalline waters of the Laguna de Kaan Luum. Come twilight, the skies above filled with stars, planets and meteor showers. Heaven indeed.

Nihi Sumba
Sumba, Indonesia

A place to connect with something larger than oneself, this remote hideaway, an hour's flight from Bali, is totally laid-back and far beyond mass tourism's radar. With just 28 villas amid hundreds of acres of luscious jungle, each beautiful suite offers sweeping views of the Indian ocean. We discovered a magical mix of wild, picture-postcard beaches, hiked to dramatic water falls and ancient villages, and enjoyed stand-up paddleboarding to the unique Spa Safari, and we can't recommend equine therapy enough. Nihi is also home to Occy's Left, one of the world's most coveted surfing breaks and the ultimate thrill for wave-riding adventure seekers.
